ROBERT WYER, PRINTER AND BOOKSELLER.

By HENRY R. PLOMER.

Read January 21st, 1895.

OBERT WYER carried on the business of a printer and bookseller, at the sign of "St. John the Evangelist, at Charing Cross," in premises that formed part of the rentals of Norwich House, and were probably not far from where Villiers Street is now situated.

Amongst the books printed by Pynson was an edition of the popular tract of Solomon & Marcolphus, for sale at this house. As Pynson's death took place in 1529, Wyer was probably established there at that time, but his biography is wrapped in the greatest obscurity.

Some Wyers, members undoubtedly of this family, are found at Wendover in Bucks.* John Wyer, who died in 1552, held a house called the Maidenhead and half an acre of land there, but his will makes no mention of Robert. Edward Wyer of Wendover, grandson of this John, bought the Three Cranes in the Vintry, of Richard Tottel, as we learn from certain proceedings in Chancery.† But of Robert we hear nothing. Nor is there anything certain known of Robert Wyer's early career as a printer. Herbert made a note in his memorandum books that Wyer was servant to Richard Fawkes, who lived in Durham rents, close by Durham House in the Strand (see Dibdin, vol. iii, p. 356); in another place,‡ the same author suggests that he was apprentice to John Butler, a printer, found with the sign of "St. John the Evangelist in Fleet Street, in St. Bride's Churchyard. over against the Conduit." It has been suggested * that the two houses were one and the same; but the idea is hardly feasible. In the first place, the two localities were sufficiently wide apart to make it unlikely that any confusion could have arisen between them. The one was at the extreme east end of Fleet Street, at the bottom of Shoe Lane; the other at the extreme west end of the Strand. Besides, the men who lived in them were surely capable of describing accurately the position of their respective houses, and Wyer is as minute as Butler in many of his colophons, which declare that he lived "in St. Martin's Parish, beside Charing Crosse," and frequently give more precise particulars, as "in the Bishoppe of Norwytches Rentes." No doubt, Wyer had an interest in the Fleet Street premises. It was, I believe, this house in which John Wyer printed for some time about the year 1550, and I have no doubt in my own mind that it was this same house to which Thos. Colwell, Robert Wyer's successor, removed in the year 1565; but precisely how he came by it is not clear.

To return from conjecture to history. In the year 1536, the Bishop of Norwich's town house, of which Wyer's premises formed part of the rentals, was surrendered to King Henry VIII in exchange for certain lands in Norfolk, and a few months afterwards the King gave it to Charles Brandon, the Duke of Suffolk, who held it until his death in 1545. This transfer marks a period in the printing of Robert Wyer. Until then, he had lived in "the Bishop of Norwich's rents." Henceforward the great house close by was known as "the Duke of Suffolk's Place," and Wyer's colophons notify the change by substituting this address, a custom which he kept up long after the house had ceased to belong to any Duke of Suffolk.

In the locality successively known by these two names, we can trace Wyer at work from the year 1530 to 1556. In that year he was succeeded by a namesake, Nicholas Wyer, who printed from the same address, and in * Mr. E. Gordon Duff made this suggestion when I read my paper on Robert Wyer, before the Library Association.

1560 by Thos. Colwell, one of William Powell's apprentices, who subsequently removed to Fleet Street, and was there in turn succeeded by Hugh Jackson.

I have been able to make a list of nearly one hundred books printed by Robert Wyer. Copies of no less than fifty of these are in the British Museum; the Bodleian contains four or five not to be found elsewhere, while the University Library at Cambridge, and the Lambeth Library have valuable specimens of this printer's work. The remainder are described from Herbert and Dibdin's editions of Ames' Typographical Antiquities. I have not the least doubt that there are many more books of this printer's still in existence, and that year by year fresh accessions will be made to the list. But, as it stands, it affords a fair basis for judging his work.

The main difficulty that confronts us, in the study of Robert Wyer, is his undated books. Out of the one hundred above mentioned, only eleven bear any sort of date, and not all of these are dates of printing; while out of this small number, only five or six are within the student's reach, so that the work of attempting to classify the undated books by reference to the dated copies, or by any method at all, is no light task.

In attempting it, I have followed as carefully as possible the methods so successfully adopted by the late William Blades in his study of the works of Caxton. But at the outset I found that the application of those methods to Robert Wyer's productions was by no means so easy as from a careful perusal of the Life of Caxton I was led to expect. It is difficult, indeed, for anyone to follow clearly in Mr. Blades' footsteps who labours under the disadvantage of not being either a printer or typefounder by trade. The distinction between different founts of the same type, between types re-cast or cut down, are so minute that only a practical printer can tell the difference, and I must confess that to this hour the mysteries of "spacing" have baffled all my attempts to apply them to the books of Robert Wyer. Nevertheless, I think I have achieved something, enough, I hope, at least to form a basis for future work.

To begin with, we may at once divide the books that were printed by Robert Wyer into three broad classes.

- 1. Those books having the "Norwich" colophon, all of which were manifestly printed before 1537.
- 2. Those having the "Suffolk" colophon, which were printed after 1536.
- 3. Those printed for other printers, or which having only a vague colophon, stating that they were "printed by me Robert Wyer," cannot be apportioned among the two preceding classes.

Of the dated books coming into the first class (leaving out of account the Expositiones Terminorum mentioned by Herbert, which may have been the work of either Butler or Wyer), the British Museum has three:—The Golden Pystle of Richard Whytford, printed in 1531; Garrard's Interpretation of the Mass in 1532; and William Marshall's translation of The Defence of Peace, printed in 1535.

The Golden Pystle is printed in octavo, in the type called "Secretary," from its resemblance to the manuscript writing of the time, with Black Letter used for the first few lines of the title page and colophon. There are twenty-eight lines to a full page of the text, the type is clear, and the lower-case w is a larger letter, with a loop or tail carried across the top, while the lower-case v and d have a similar tail, and strokes are used for punctuation. The colophon is set up in type, and the printer's name is spelt "WYRE," instead of "WYER."

The second of these three books, The Interpretation of the Mass (also an octavo) is identical in the character of the type and the number of lines to page with the above, but differs in this respect, that the printer's name is spelt "WYER" in the colophon.

The third book, the Defence of Peace, has not the "Norwich" colophon, though it was printed before the transfer of the house. It is a folio, and the best specimen of Robert Wyer's work that is to be found, probably the best he ever turned out. It is printed on fine paper with wide margins; the type is "Secretary," with Black Letter for the title, colophon, and headings of paragraphs. But in this work, the lower-case w, v, and d of the "Secretary" type are shorn of the loops seen in the two preceding books.

It is interesting to note that in one of the recently published volumes of the State Papers of Henry the Eighth (vol. ii, pp. 325, etc.), are letters written by the translator of this book, William Marshall, to Thomas Cromwell, from which we learn that it cost the sum of £34 to print. This would, I suppose, be equal to about £300 of our present money.

These three books then, all printed before 1536, were each of them printed in "Secretary" type, and Herbert tells us that the copy of the Book of Hours, which he says had an almanac dated 1533, was also printed in "Secretary."

Now, taking up the undated books with the "Norwich" colophon, I find, with only one exception, exactly the same character of type prevailing in them. The earliest of these is probably the First Dyaloge in Englysshe, a book of law translated from a Latin work of still earlier date. Peter Treveris printed the Second Dialogue in English, in the earlier part of 1531, so that Wyer may have printed his in 1530 or thereabouts. It was printed in octavo, the text in "Secretary," twenty-seven lines to the page, but with running titles, foliation, quotations, etc., in Black Letter. In the text the large lower-case w and v are seen, strokes are used in place of commas, and in addition to the printer's full page device there is a woodcut of the Royal Arms, supported by a greyhound and griffin.

The Diurnal for Devout Souls is identical in size and type with the foregoing, while the earlier of the two editions of the Compost of Ptolomeus has not only the "Norwich" colophon and all the peculiarities of setting noticed in the Golden Pystle, printed in 1531, but as in that book the printer's name is spelt "WYRE" and not "WYER," in his device. We may therefore conclude that the date of printing must be about 1531.

In the same way many other undated books can be placed in this period, notably the Medled Life by William Hylton, the earlier editions of the Antidotharius and the Prognostication of Erra Pater.

In contrast with these books in "Secretary" type we have in Erasmus's Exhortation to the Study of the Scriptures, an octavo, with the "Norwich" colophon, but printed throughout in Black Letter, twenty-one lines to the page.

This book is by far the best specimen of Wyer's Black Letter printing that I have seen. I should imagine that the type was quite new, as the edges of the letters are sharp, every letter appears perfect, and the ink is as black as the day it was printed. No other octavo book of Wyer's printed in Black Letter that I have ever seen has twenty-one lines to the page. Altogether, I cannot fix any date for the printing of this book, but unless others turn up, to join company with it, I do not think it weakens the probability that the bulk of the books of this period were printed in "Secretary."

When we turn to the second class—the books with the "Suffolk" colophon—we find that these cover a very wide space of time, from the year 1536 down to the very year in which we lose sight of Robert Wyer altogether, the year 1556, and yet there is not a single dated book bearing this colophon. But there are books with dates subsequent to 1536, notably the Questionary of Cyrurgeons, printed for Richard Banckes and Henry Dabb in 1542, and several others, the date of which can be fixed by internal evidence, and all these serve as finger-posts to lead the investigator.

There is the Assize of Bread, a quarto, in which mention is made of a statute that was to take effect from the Feast of the Purification, in the year, "a thousande, five hundred, forty and three"; there is the Ordinal or Statute concerning artificers, printed for Richard Bankes, a statute enacted in 1543; more important still, there is the Civil Nosgay, by John Goodale, in which there are allusions to public events; "the capture of Boulogne, and the overthrow of the Scots," the latter taking place in 1547, and so giving us at least 1548 as the date of its printing, if not later. Then there is William Salisbury's Description of the World, with an author's preface dated 1550, and last of all, a Prognostication, with an Almanac for 1556.

I have made a close study of all these books, have compared one with another, and the results I have arrived at are as follows:—

The "Secretary" type continued in use for the text of all books printed down to 1542, but they have only twenty-seven lines to the full octavo page, and ordinary punctuation is used, and I would suggest that it was the old type recast. But in 1542, and from that time onwards, the order was reversed, the text of all books being printed in Black Letter, and the supplementary matter in "Secretary."

This is the arrangement found in the Questionary of Cyrurgeons, and other quartos, but I have based my tests mainly on the octavo books, they being by far the most numerous; and these group themselves into two periods. Those printed between 1542 and 1550 are uniform in size, measuring in every case, after due allowance for binders' shears,  $5\frac{1}{4} \times 3\frac{1}{2}$ . They have twenty-four lines to the page without running titles or pagination, and rarely have the printer's device. The later books, from 1550 to 1556, have only twenty-three lines to the page, but are frequently found with running titles and marginalia.

I also find that the lower-case fount in all these books is smaller than that used in printing the Exhortation of Erasmus which I referred to just now; indeed, the number of lines to the page prove this, but whether it was the same type cut down or recast, I have not sufficient knowledge of type-founding to be able to say.

There are, of course, one or two books that will not fit in with this arrangement, as for instance, the Ordinal or Statute, printed for Richard Banckes, which has only twenty-two lines to the octavo page. It is just as well that it is so, because other books may come to light that tally with these exceptions, and so we shall be able in time to contract these two periods into smaller ones. I have put the year 1542 as the earliest year in the first period, because I find the Questionary of Cyrurgeons printed in Black Letter. But that work was a quarto, and there is no octavo that can be assigned to that year. It is quite possible, and even probable, that the octavo books were printed with 22 lines to the page, up to and including the year of the production of the Ordinal, that is about 1543 or 1544, but it hardly seems right to state so as a fact until other books turn up that are printed in the same way.

Another exception, which in no way affects the above classification was a book called The 24 Stones which was printed in a Black Letter unlike any other fount in the possession of this printer (type No. 7). It was a smaller and finer letter, making 27 lines to the octavo page, and was no doubt borrowed from some other printer for the occasion. This practice was very common among the early printers, and another of Wyer's books is a remarkable instance of it. His nearest neighbour was Richard Fawkes, who lived in Durham Rents, close to Durham House, and amongst the books printed by that printer was one entitled De Cursione Lune. has Fawkes' colophon and device, but beneath them the words, "And be for to sell at the sign of St. John the Evangelist beside Charing Cross," which would of themselves be proof that it was printed for Robert Wyer. Not only is this put beyond doubt, but the fact is established that Wyer lent Fawkes the fount and the blocks to print it with, for when Wyer reprinted the book, with the "Suffolk" colophon, under the title of The Nature of the Seven Days of the Week, the type and blocks are identical with those used by Fawkes.

It does not seem, on the other hand, that Wyer ever printed anything for Fawkes. But he printed several books for Richard Banckes, at least one notable work for Richard Kele, who succeeded Bankes at the Long Shop in the Poultry, and one also for John Gough, who lived at the Mermaid, in Lombard Street.

Robert Wyer appears to have had a good stock of founts. In "Secretary" he had two at least, and they are generally found in combination. This type very closely resembles Caxton's type No. 4.

Of Black Letter types he had five or six founts, if not more, ranging from the Great Primer, a very beautiful letter seen at its best in Marshall's Defence of Peace, down to a very small lower-case letter, used for marginalia. He also had a fount of Roman capitals, a very poor one, chiefly used for initials. He was in the habit, especially in his later works, of using these types generously, and in the same title-page there will sometimes be found no less than five founts, four of them being Black Letter and one Secretary.

In the matter of initial letters also Wyer was especially rich, for he had a large and striking assortment. The most noticeable was a set of woodcut letters, adorned with grotesque faces. These so closely resemble some used by Wynkyn de Worde, that they may have belonged to the same set. Wyer does not appear to have had a complete alphabet of them, as he never used more than one or two in a single book. Another very fine set of capitals was an eight-line Roman, measuring 1½ inches square, adorned with figures, animals and flowers. One of these, the letter "L," with the figure of a man dancing, is especially good; the pose of the figure is free and most artistic, and every detail of his dress is well shewn. This alphabet was also used by Wynkyn de Worde.

A third set of initial letters used by Robert Wyer was a text-hand, letter of German character. It occurs in Salisbury's Description of the Worlde (1550), and also in the Dietary of Helthe.

The most profusely illustrated of any of Robert Wyer's books was the C. Hystoryes of Troy, a translation made no doubt by Wyer himself, from Christine de Pisan's book with the same title, printed in Paris in 1490, by Philippe Pigouchet. In Wyer's book the woodcuts are copies from the pictures in the French edition. The first half-dozen or so are reversed, that is, the figures on the left of the original illustration, appear on the right in Wyer's reproduction, which would not have happened had the blocks been cut from the originals. As the French work is full of illustrations, many of them repeated, Wyer, in order to save the time and trouble of cutting duplicate blocks, used up any blocks he had by him, and I recognize several used in his other books, while some I have no doubt belong to books of which no copy is now to be found. For example, one of them represents the half-length of a woman in a pointed headgear and surrounded with stars, holding in her left hand a box or cradle, while on the left hand side of the block are the words "Lady Fortune." This was used in The boke of the Fayre Gentylwoman, Lady Fortune, of which the only copy known is in the Lambeth Palace Library. It figures again, with the title of "Lady Prudence, in The Dispute between the Heralds of England and France," a book with Richard Wyer's colophon, though printed throughout with Robert's types and blocks.

The best example of engraving to be met with in Wyer's books is the printer's large device or book-plate. It represents the Evangelist seated on the ground writing, and on his right hand an eagle holding in his beak an ink-well. In the background is the view of a city. Beneath this was frequently put another block having the printer's name and mark. In addition to this, Wyer used a smaller block of the Evangelist, sometimes with the top portion cut away, sometimes with a border piece added to it; and almost invariably without the eagle. This was generally placed on the title-page or somewhere near it, while the large device is generally on the last page or below the colophon.

I mentioned just now "Richard" Wyer. There were three other printers or booksellers in London of the name of Wyer in the sixteenth century. Richard had a shop in St. Paul's Churchyard; John Wyer held what I believe to have been Butler's old shop in Fleet Street; and the third, Nicholas, is found at Charing Cross, at the same time as Thomas Colwell, that is, between 1562–1566. There is at present no evidence as to what relation these men bore to Robert Wyer. I am inclined to think that the two first were mere booksellers, because the few books which are found with their names prove to have been printed with Robert Wyer's types and blocks.

The third member of the group, Nicholas, stands on a different footing, and I hope we may be able to find out something more about him. It is evident that he was living at Charing Cross in 1556, and we must not be astonished at not finding any books printed by him before 1560. Queen Mary was then on the throne, and her reign, as we know, was disastrous to the printing trade, except to the firms which printed Roman Catholic books. Several of the printers, notably Richard Grafton, ceased to print and went abroad during her reign, and it may have been the same with Nicholas Wyer. It certainly looks as though he succeeded to the Charing Cross business, and afterwards took into partnership William Powell's apprentice, Thomas Colwell.

It now only remains for me to notice the character of the books that issued from the press of Robert Wyer.

The bulk of them were small octavos dealing with subjects of a popular nature, and therefore readily saleable. These remind us very forcibly that the people for whom they were intended, were grossly superstitious. Nearly every one of these little tracts deals with the influence of the weather, of the moon, of the planets, of precious stones, and of herbs, upon the health and destinies of mankind. No old wife's tale was too simple to be believed, and the wildest fables were repeated with all sincerity.

Religious feeling coloured the literature of the time very deeply, and we see the traces of it in the mass-books, diurnals, exhortations, and so forth, that form so large a part of Wyer's productions.

Medicine, again, was always in request; hence the popularity of such works as the Antidotarius, and the translations from Arnaldus de Nova Villa and Ioannes de Vigo. In an age when physicians were few and costly, and the plague a frequent and dreaded visitor to all our great cities, books treating of the simplest and readiest cures were certain of a large sale.

Another popular book was The Assize of Bread, or "The Law of the Loaf," as it might be termed. Human nature was much the same then as it is now. Our County Council enforces the law that the poor shall not be cheated of their weight in coal, and four hundred years ago the State found it necessary to protect the poor against rascally bakers.

We are reminded again of this in the Ordinal or Statutes which regulated the employment of men and the wages they were to receive, and learn that such things as "sweating" and "strikes," long hours and short wages, were grievances then as now.

But all Wyer's publications were not for the cheap book stall. I have already referred to the C. Hystoryes of Troy. That book must have involved a considerable outlay and must have taken some considerable time to print, and it could only have been undertaken in the belief that the work when finished would attract the notice of wealthy buyers.

The Defence of Peace we now know cost £34 to print. William Marshall, the translator of it, wrote several books of a religious character. This one, however, was not a success. Though produced in the best possible way, it did not sell, and probably the printer as well as the author lost money over it.

Another book of importance was the Questionary of Cyrurgeons, printed at the costs of Robert Copland and Henry Dabb. This was a book not likely to have been sold for a few pence.

It is a noticeable thing that Wyer reprinted several parts of books that had previously issued from the press of Wynkyn de Worde. The Medled Lyfe was a series of extracts from The Floure of the Commandements. The Properties of a Good Horse, which he printed with the dialogue between Boccus and Sydrac, had previously appeared in the Book of Hunting and Hawking. I do not wish to attach undue importance to this. By itself it proves nothing, but it is worth bearing in mind, in connection with other things, as pointing to a possible business relationship between the two men.

I have now told you what I know about Robert Wyer and I believe you will agree with me that he was a printer of no mean order. It is evident that his brother craftsmen were of this opinion from the amount of work they gave him.

If he had done no more than print the Defence of Peace and the Hystoryes of Troy, he would well deserve a place amongst the first printers of his day. But much of his other work will bear comparison with what was done by others, while the number of books already traced to his press proves him to have been one of the busiest men in the trade.

ROBERT WYER'S TYPES.

In one instance, i.e., The Compost of Ptholomeus, with the "Norwich" colophon, a larger w, having a double loop, is used with this type.

No. 2.—Secretary. Very much the same in character as above, but the lower-case letters w, v and d are not looped. Example: The Defence of Peace (1535).

This type, I believe, continued to be used by Wyer during the whole of the time he printed, and the books found printed in "Secretary," with the "Suffolk" colophon, are in this type.

- No. 3.—Black Letter (great primer). A fine and well-cut letter, used only for titles, colophons, and headings to subjects, etc. Seen at its best in The Defence of Peace (1535).
- No. 4.—Black Letter. A large lower-case, four and a-half lines to inch, nineteen lines to page.

The only two books I have seen, printed entirely in this type, are The iiii Tokens, by Jan van Doesborg, and The Treatyse answerynge the Boke of Berdes. It was generally used in combination with No. 5.

No. 5.—Black Letter. A smaller lower-case letter than the preceding, but well cut and regular.

First used in printing Erasmus's Exhortation to the Study of the Scriptures found with the "Norwich" colophon. It there makes twenty-one lines to octavo page. This type was afterwards very much cut down.

- No. 6.—A very small Black Letter, used only for marginalia and supplementary matter.
- No. 7.—Black Letter. A small, well-cut, and finer letter than either Nos. 4 or 5, making twenty-seven lines to octavo page.

I have found it in the Boke of the XXIIII Stones, and imagine it was borrowed by Wyer for that purpose, perhaps of Berthelet.

No. 8.—Roman. Capitals only.

INITIAL LETTERS.

- r.—A set of woodcut initials, 15 of an inch to an inch square, showing grotesque faces, sometimes used with a double rule and sometimes without. This may have been the same alphabet as that used by Wynkyn de Worde; but Wyer does not seem to have had a complete alphabet.
- 2.—A smaller set letters of the same character.
- 3.—A decorated roman, white on a black ground, ornamented with flowers, birds, animals and human beings. Size 1½ inch square. Letters found in this—F, I, L, O, S. A letter L of this alphabet is to be found in the New Herbal of Macer, and is a very good example of this fine initial.
- 4.—A roman, I 1 inch square, with animals and human beings. Part of an alphabet only. Initial letters of this character were used by several other printers of that time, and came, it is believed, from Germany.
- 5.—A roman, white on a black ground, with floriated decoration.
- 6.—A roman,  $\tau$  inch square, ornamented, white on a stencilled background, sometimes showing flowers. Letters usually found—R, T, W.

- 7.—A roman, 3/4 inch square, white on a black ground, with interlaced pattern.
- 8.—A roman, white on a black ground. Example: Letter G with a squirrel sitting upright.
- 9.—A text-hand initial,  $\frac{5}{8}$  of an inch square, found in books of a late date only, such as the Description of the Sphere and Frame of the Worlde (1550). Part of an alphabet only—G, I, O, T, W.
- 10.—A three-line Black Letter (great primer capital),  $\frac{7}{16}$  of an inch square.
- II.—A set of roman capitals, very badly cut. Used sometimes for first line of title-page, as in Macer's Herbal.

These are some of the principal initials and capitals used by Wyer, but it is possible there are some others I have not seen.

DEVICES.

Robert Wyer's device consisted of a representation of St. John the Evangelist, bare-headed, and dressed in a long robe, seated under a tree, presumably in the Island of Patmos, writing on a scroll spread out on his knee. On the right hand side of him an eagle, with outstretched wings, 'holds in its beak an ink-well. Water appears to surround the spot on which the Evangelist is seated, and in the background is a view of a city with many towers and spires. Beneath this block is generally a smaller one, wedge-shaped, and having the printer's name and merchant's mark upon it. There were three forms of this device. 1. In the Compost of Ptholomeus, printed with the "Norwich" colophon, it appears on the verso of the last leaf in a much more crude state than in any other book. The name of the printer is cut on the same block as the device, and is spelt "Wyre," and the letters are straight, whereas in every other instance the name was cut in slanting letters. In the top left-hand corner of the block found in the Compost, the treatment of the upper part of the tree is altogether different from that found in any other example. It is also noticeable in this that the wavy lines representing water are not nearly so close in this as in the other form, and I believe it to be the earlier of the two. 2. The same device, but more clearly cut, and with the name-block separate. This is the one generally found in this printer's books, usually at the end. Sometimes, but that rarely, the name-block only is inserted. 3. A smaller and mutilated form of No. 2, from which the eagle was omitted, and a geometrical side-piece introduced. This is most usually found either on the title-page, or in the first part of a book.

WOODCUTS.

Next in importance to his devices are a set of small woodcuts, used singly, either on the title-page, or the verso of the title-page, and described by Herbert and others as "the figure with stars," "a three-quarter portrait," etc. These are met with over and over again in Wyer's works. They were copied from a set of blocks used by Antoine Verard, the French printer, in his edition of the Horae, printed in 1490.

From whom Robert Wyer obtained them is, however, unknown, though several of his contemporaries had others of the same set.

As it may be interesting to some of my readers to identify these, I have made the following list:—

- r.—Three-quarter figure with four stars. (Hora, b5 verso)
- 2.—Three-quarter figure with hat and feather. (Horæ, b8 recto.)
- 3.—Lady with pointed head-gear. (Horae, a ij recto.)
- 4.—Three-quarter figure of a man looking to the left, through a window. (Hora, a i verso.)
- 5.—Lady with candle in right hand. (Hora, a j verso second leaf.)
- 6.—Lady with rose. (Horae, a j recto of second leaf.)
- 7.—Crucifixion. (Hora, 1 ij recto.)

The next most important series of blocks were those which Wyer cut himself for his edition of the C. Hystoryes of Troy, probably printed about 1543 or 1545. Some of the blocks cut for this book he used in others; amongst them the Castell of Love, and the Questions of King Boccus, which are thereby proved to have been printed at a later date.

Another woodcut often met with in Wyer's books is that representing Ptolemy and female figures, the philosopher having a mathematical instrument in his left hand. This measures  $2\frac{11}{16} \times 2\frac{12}{16}$  inch, and appears in most of the geographical and astronomical tracts.

The title-page of the Assize of Bread is adorned with four blocks illustrating the trade of a baker.

The Perfyte Prognostication has a series of woodcuts which might have been conceived and executed by a small boy with a blunt pen-knife.

Colophon: Imprynted by  $\parallel$  me Robert wyer,  $\parallel$  for Richarde  $\parallel$  Kele. [Device No. 2.]

COPY: British Museum (G. 10332).

REMARKS: The date of printing of this book can be approximated by two circumstances. Sir Nicholas Carew was beheaded in March,  $15\frac{39}{40}$ , and it was probably a year or two after that event. The wood-cut on the title page was one of those used in the One Hundred Histories of Troy, so that it was subsequent to the printing of that book.

44.—Chronicle of the kings of England. n.d. 8vo.

COPY: Lambeth Library (imperfect, wanting all before d).

REMARKS: Under the heading of William Marshall, Herbert (p. 500) mentions "An Abridgement of Sebastian Munster's Chronicle, 1542. 8vo.," but without stating the printer, and the author of the article on Marshall in the Dictionary of National Biography, states that this was printed by Robert Wyer, without giving his authority. The earliest edition of Munster's "Cosmography," which seems to be the work referred to, does not appear to have been printed before 1550.

COPY: British Museum (C. 31, a. 24).

REMARKS: This was another edition with slight variations of spelling. Strokes were not used in this for punctuation until the last two leaves were in the press, when the stock of commas ran out.

77.—MOULTON, THOMAS. Myrrour or Glasse of Helth. n.d. 8vo.

Collation: A-G, in eights; H, five leaves; 61 ff.; 23 ll. Types 3, 4 and 5.

COPY: British Museum (C. 31, c. 16).

REMARKS: This has the Pestilence part put first, and frequent mention is made of the "plague nowe raging." Plague was rife in London in 1543, 1546 and 1552, to any of which years the book may belong.

78.—New Idol and Old Devil. n.d. 8vo.

COLLATION: a-e, in eights; 40 ff.; 23 ll.

Description: [Title] A Boke made || by a certayne || great clerke, agaynst the || newe Idole and olde || Deuyll/ whiche of || late tyme, in Mis||nia shulde haue || ben canony||sed for a || saynt. [Verso of title page, Device No. 3.]

Note: Dibdin placed this among the dated books under 1534, but this was the date of the translation and first printing in England, not necessarily the date at which Wyer printed it, though the type and general appearance of the book is not against the supposition.

79.—Ordinal or Statute concerning Artyficers. n.d. 8vo.

COLLATION: A-E, in eights; 40 ff.; 22 ll. Types 3 and 5.

Description: [Title] The Ordynal || or Statutz concerninge Arty-||fycers, feruauntes, & labou-||rers/ newly prynted || with dyuers other || thyngz thereunto || added. [Device No. 3.]
